Questions (1-5)

August 6, day of Hiroshima was atom bombed in 1945, symbolizes at once mom’s nightmare and his greatest dream, the rightness of a nuclear war, and the dream of genuine and lasting peace. Beginning with the survivors of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the awareness of the danger and sentiment for disarmament and peace has become universal transcending national and ideological barriers. And yet more deadly nuclear weapons are being piled on top of the heap, that is enough to wipe out all traces of life from this planet. Forty years after Hiroshima, there is no light at the end of the tunnel, only occasional flickers. The arms limitation talks between the superpowers, who hold the key to disarmament and peace, have yielded nothing so far.

The main responsibility for suppressing the nuclear threat is that of the super powers. However, other powers also have nuclear weapons and they must share the responsibility. And not only they but those nations which have or are developing nuclear capability must see the issues in a longer term and longer perspective.

All over the world there are thousands of forests. They are very important to us. Not only do they provide us with timber but they also give us the raw material out of which paper is made. What is most important is that they replace the oxygen which we breathe from the air. You can see then that it is necessary for us to save the forest unfortunately; many forests are destroyed every year by something which can be avoided – fire. Fire can destroy thousands of acres of valuable forest in just a few hours – a forest which has taken perhaps a hundred years to grow.

How these terrible fires start? Do you think they just happen? No, of course they don't they are started by people. They don't start them on purpose, of course. They start them by accident. But most of these accidents can be avoided. It is very easy to start a forest fire, especially in the summer when the grass and wood are dry. It only needs a dropped cigarette end, or even a spark, to set a whole forest on fire. Because the fires start so easily, a constant look-out is kept in many forests. Special towers are built and fire wardens sit in these, watching for smoke. If they spot a fire, they immediately inform their head quarters.
